Dear Jacqueline Randall,

I am reaching out to you, because of the presentation about the Honours Program on the 13th of November. During the presentation I became interested in the program, because it shows a different approach to self-actualisation than the study computer engineering of applied computer science (TI) offers. With this motivation letter, I want to apply for a spot in the program.

The Honours program appeals to me, because it sounds and looks like one of the biggest challenges on intellectual, social and emotional level. Especially the multi-disciplinary aspect of the Honours-community speaks to me. I have various experiences with multi-disciplinary teams in the healthcare field and I always find it astounding how many different perspectives there can be in any given situation. That motivates me to work together in multi-disciplinary groups to reach our goals.

Another aspect of the Honours program that motivates me, is the fact that failing is not a sign of weakness. In the presentation I got the impression that success is often build on many failures. With the Honours program I think I can turn my failures into learning experiences.

I would like to further elaborate my motivational letter in an interview.

Sincerely,

Timothy van der Steenhoven
